In the Bridge Series, simple, context-embedding communicative activities in earlier courses lead towards more cognitively demanding, context-reduced communicative activities in the later courses, in preparation for the meaningful learning of geography, mathematics, science and history. However, the reproduction of inequality can also be attributed directly to the failure of education policies in many countries. However, if the educational benefits of the students are given the first priority, we should not throw away the baby with the bath water, dismissing L1 use altogether.
