also be confirmed in terms of accessing infrastructure and urban equipment surrounding Calabar, partially compensating the prevailing deficiencies within the neighborhood, such as the absence of high schools, specialized hospitals and leisure activities. Inferred from these observations, the hypothesis of an Soziale Armut und Segregation (German Edition) environment must come under careful scrutiny, since the functional economic integration of the inhabitants, almost exclusively occurring in the realm of low-wage personal services, neither bridges the social distances nor impedes more subtle forms of place-based discrimination.
