Legacy of Firefighter 879 study conducted on a group of Israel firefighters examined one month after the Carmel fire disaster [8] revealed an occurrence of positive changes, measured with a short version of the Posttraumatic Growth Inventory PTGI. Too many free radicals can lead to a condition known as oxidative stress which can cause cell death, cancer, and many other health complications. Age of the respondents did not differentiate the levels of posttraumatic positive changes. AbstractThe purpose of this study was to establish the relation between resiliency and posttraumatic growth. All rights reserved. History, tradition and remembering those who made the ultimate sacrifice in the line of duty is also a priority at the new Association office. As can be seen in Figure 4 there is a weak relationship between resiliency and posttraumatic growth. Others a chance to express condolences.
