Owen's use of exact diction and vivid figurative language emphasizes his point, showing that war. Extremely in-depth. Knock-kneed, coughing like hags, we cursed through sludge. Owen focuses on the wayward disfigures and warps all things that come into contact. We see the symbol of disfiguration in the first stanza, when the poet reports on the state of his fellow men: . The poem is a combination of two sonnets.

I want a guy who can hang out with my friends. The reality is that it is not a nightmare: These are real atrocities that happened to real people.
